Tony will serenade us with Nessun Dorma and other Italian favorites (singing along is encouraged)!

Where Tony Spavone travels, music cannot be too far behind. Tony Spavone's Ristorante is proof enough. Food is served—excellent food, in fact—but music is also a star on the menu. Spavone's restaurant is one of the few in Chicagoland where the owner regularly serenades his guests with a song; where a restaurant full of people cheerfully sing along to whatever tune catches their fancy; where a roomful of diners routinely gets up to form a giant conga line. Only a professional performer could create a Spavone's Ristorante, and it isn't surprising that the performer happens to be Italian. "I don't know anything else but the restaurant business and singing," the congenial Spavone says with a broad smile. "There are a lot of good restaurants, but when you have a combination like that it's always a party." He pauses, then adds, "You grow up in an Italian family, we're always doing things together. And I think that's what it is. You have to let people feel at home, comfortable. That's part of my background."
