33 W Kinzie, Chicago

Three stars, Phil Vettel, Chicago Tribune

“Harry Caray’s place downtown on Kinzie is a treasure, a living legend to the great Harry Caray.”

Pat Bruno, Chicago Sun-Times

“The Harry Caray’s restaurant building is a textbook example of the Dutch Renaissance Revival Style. Its unique appearance and old-world charm prompted Paul Gapp, the late architecture critic for the Chicago Tribune, to call it one of his 20-favorite Chicago buildings, spaces, places and things.”

Commission on Chicago Landmarks, August 4, 1999

Meet and Greet Dutchie

Dinner with Dutchie

It’s been 10 years since Harry Caray died, and Dutchie misses him as much today as when he passed away on February 18, 1998. “It’s just gone by so fast. Where does the time go?” Dutchie wondered Thursday from her winter home in California. “But Harry used to say that wasting time is a crime. He lived life to the fullest, that’s for sure. That’s the lesson he left for me. It’s one he left for a lot of people.”
